

POETRY.

FOR THE LITCHFIELD ENQUIRER.
NIGHT.

O' blissful Night! thou night of moon and stars,
That roll with silver steeds in golden cars;
Thou Night, that spreads thy darkling mantle o'er
In peaceful silence o'er both bower and glade;
Thou Night, that bear'st upon thy dewy wings
To man and beast the rest to thee that clings;
Thou that in perfect order visit'st all
That have a being on this earthly ball,
Pursuing ever in thy course the day,
That in the west before thee fades away;
Thou that from thy corniced throne of blue,
Dost send upon the earth refreshing dew;
Dispensing unto all thy bounteous store,
To rich and poor thou givest nothing more,
But dearest out in turn to every land,
To man and beast the blessings of thy hand;
Nor yet alone dost thou thy bounties share,
But every plant and blooming flower declares
How just and equitable are all thy ways—
Though dumb in silence they proclaim thy praise.
Thou sit'st at for good on these in downy vest,
And givest man and every creature rest.
I love thee when thy lamps are lit, O Night!
When they transmit to me their golden light,
For thou art lovely in thy aspect too,
I should be loth to say to thee adieu.
If thou didst not so soon return again,
And lead through heaven all thy shining train,
Then dost return, and I admire thee then,
When I am hid by thee from mortal ken;
Alone with thee I feel supremely blest,
And thou wilt ever be my welcome guest.
As day declines, I love with waiting eyes
To gaze upon thee waxing in the skies,
And watch to see what gem thou first shalt send
To kiss the parting day, and what shall lend
The brightest lustre in your burning throng—
And what shall best inspire the sacred song;
For thou hast magic charms to wake the muse,
To sing in strains as sweet as angelic use.
But thou, O Night, as lovely as thou art,
Of one great whole thou formest but a part!
Thy God is Nature's God, he holds the reins
Of universal law, and he ordains
All power and loveliness; he gives to all
A part to act, nor is his judgment small;
He meth out the heavens with a span,
Nor suffers ought to mar his perfect plan.
At his command must thou succeed the day,
Till he shall stamp on all his works decay,
Till all the worlds shall be destroyed by fire,
Till all the stony host shall thus expire.

From a New-York paper.

On Monday last, in the Senate, in presenting the Boston Memorial, signed by nearly seven thousand respectable citizens, Mr. Webster made a series of very impressive and appropriate remarks, among which are the following:

"Where were the public treasures of the United States? No man in the Senate knew; no man in the other House knew. The last time that the Senate had heard of them, they were deposited in certain banks not fixed or created by its will. They might be changed, for aught the Senate knew, within the last half hour, to some other place, which it knew not. What was, (said Mr. W.) the condition of the treasure six months ago! Was it situated as it is now? Did not every member know where the money was then? and had not Congress an account of it, and could see that it was all there? Had Congress any such right now? Had that House, or the other, the power to go to the Bank of the Metropolis, or to the Manhattan Bank, in order to withdraw it? The Executive and now the preservation of the public treasure, and Congress had no control over it."

"It was a fact not to be denied, that every dollar of the public money—ordinarily eight or ten millions—between the moment of its receipt at the Custom House and the Land Office—from the moment of its appropriation under the authority of law, was under the entire, exclusive government of the Secretary of the Treasury—Congress knew not where—Congress declared not how."

Mr. Sprague spoke likewise in relation to the Memorial. We extract a passage of his speech:

"If he was not misinformed, (Mr. S. said,) during the Northern tour, while the Chief Magistrate was residing in the city of Boston, this disastrous measure had been decided on, which had now brought before the Senate the protest and memorial of 7000 of these citizens. If he had not been greatly misinformed, the letter of the 25th of June, addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, was dated from Boston during that visit, and at the very time when the person whose name was affixed to it, was confined to his chamber by sickness, in a dark room, and in a condition of entire incapability of physical or intellectual effort. Would to Heaven, that amidst the scene of uninterrupted prosperity which then surrounded him on all sides, and the respect which was every where paid to the Authorities of the Union, some strong influence could have withheld his hand from that signature while such tributes of respect and approbation were tendered to those who were the agents in continuing to us a Government which protected the general happiness. That people whom the President then saw in a condition of prosperity and gladness had now come hither by thousands with the language of gloom and sorrow and dismay."

Litchfield, Oct. 17.

The Litchfield Mutual Fire Insurance Company

WAS incorporated at the last session of the legislature, and authorized to effect Insurances on Buildings and Fixtures only in the County of Litchfield. The company was organized in the month of July last, and went into operation about the first of September; and has now effected insurance on a large amount of property, and has a fund paid in and secured sufficient to meet any probable loss.

The advantages of this method of insurance are, that a man who has a policy is a member of the company, and has a right to the inspection of the Books, and to vote in all meetings of the Company; and has also a right to the dividends. The policies are made to run five years, and the person effecting insurance is required to pay the premium for one year only, at the same rate charged in other offices, and the premium for four years (which is the utmost liability of the assured) is charged on the Books of the Company, and not called for unless necessary to meet losses, and the account is balanced at the expiration of the policy.

Application for insurance may be made directly at the office of the Company, or to the agents in the several towns.
